SCHOOL OF INTERNATIONAL STUDIES

Course (MA/PhD)	: Ph.D.
Course No.	: AW646N
Course Title	: The Process of Political and Economic Restructuring in Latin America
Course Type (Core/Optional)	: Core
Course Teacher	: Dr. Aprajita Kashyap
Credits	: Two
Semester	: Winter
Contact Hours	: 2 per week

Course Objectives

The course would deal with historic and contemporary political and economic issues in Latin America from the latter half of the twentieth century and trace them to their present integration into world polity and economy. There would be a special focus on political restructuring (constitutional developments) and economic restructuring (neoliberalism, globalization and debt management). The consequences of the process of restructuring need to be examined that would comprise the social costs this restructuring has generated. In addition, attention would be given to the role of global, hemispheric and regional forces in shaping the Latin American political, economic and social developments and events.

Learning Outcomes

At the end of the course, the students would be able to develop skills to have a nuanced understanding of comparative politics and economics within the Latin American region. Theoretical and conceptual foundations would be laid to inculcate critical reading, analysis and evaluation of available sources to be able to develop competency in the application of comparative methodologies in Latin America and India.
